These three books will help a great deal in matching children's wonder and curiosity about natural life to the habits of close observation that turns looking into science. They have descriptive, involving texts. Althea knows as well as anybody how quirky details appeal to 5 to 9's: read in Life in Ponds what whirligig Beetles and Moorhens do when they're frightened.

Under the Magnifying Glass has some fascinating details on domestic creepies. Beside the Sea, which worked wonders for my rusty natural knowledge on a Welsh beach with a four year old, has vivid pictures of birds, shells, crabs and, again, some fascinating details.

These are issued in hard and paperback, will support classroom activities and (rare recommendation from nonfiction) should be popular for personal purchase.
