Having a new baby in the house must be hard for big sisters and that's just what this story is about. Tania manages to listen in to her parents' conversations (using the baby alarm) and hears that they do love her after all. 'Ever since Adam had been born, she'd wondered whether Mum and Dad really liked her as much as they did him. But now that she'd heard them say she was special, she felt happy.' A comforting story with plenty of realism and humour. Thoroughly recommended.
